

Dear Sirs:

We express our support for Net Neutrality, the concept that no intermediary should have the right to refuse or limit access to information via the Internet.

We reject the proposition that common carriers, government agencies, or any other agency should have the right to control information on the internet.

This includes throttling speed, limiting sessions, or interfering with the flow of data on the internet – whether based on content or format.

The general availability of the Internet has spawned many new ideas, services, businesses, and more. Many of these businesses have generated profits, opportunities, and employment.

The internet was founded on the concept of connectivity being ubiquitous and equitable. Now that the internet is part of the fabric of our lives those concepts must be defended.

History is rife with examples of attempts to control the flow of information. Constricting the flow of information is an attack on democracy – which requires that all people have information to exercise their civic duty.

Please oppose any attempts to restrict the internet.

Please support Net Neutrality.

Sincerely,

William J. Sweeney
